As a young woman, Rose Naftalin once confessed that she hated to cook. Fortunately, after a major change of heart. Rose spent 30 years perfecting her skills in her own Ohio restaurant before moving to Portland in 1956. Not nearly ready to retire, she opened the first Rose's on NW 23rd and introduced our city to New York-style pastrami, corned beef, chicken liver and especially Reuben sandwiches. Rose also baked her famously huge cakes, pastries and desserts. Even more, she mastered local Northwest favorites, like crab and fresh seafood, dishes she never dreamed of serving back in Toledo.

With her mix of New York deli and Portland favorites, Rose's attracted crowds from far and wide. Guests would line up for a "Special Delicacy," usually prepared by Rose herself. In fact, Rose famously refused to leave the kitchen. She insisted on doing things her way, by herself, right up until she retired in 1968. When she finally hung up her apron for the last time, Rose remarked that her feet "were tired and it was time to write a cookbook."

This could have been the end, but Max Birnbach a local restaurant veteran already in his sixties became the new owner. Max vowed to keep the original recipes and traditions alive. And for the next 24 years, well past his 80th birthday, he did. In fact, the biggest difference was that Max worked in the front of the restaurant (not the kitchen!) where he greeted and seated guests who came from the neighborhood, as well as from across the country.

Today, the third generation of owners honor the traditions set down by both Rose and Max. As times have changed, new appetizers, breakfast, lunch and dinner entrées have been added. Still, many original items from 1956 remain on the menu. And Rose's continues to be a one-of-a-kind combination of a New York deli and a Portland family-style restaurant. So welcome to Rose's Restaurant. We're glad you're here. And one way or the other, we'll see that you get the "best of both worlds" with our New York taste and Portland flavor.
